cracy; also the Duke d'Aiguillon and Matthleu de Montmorency.[1] All the droits feodaux are to be put an end to, A Te Deum was sung In the chapel at Versailles, at which the National Assembly assisted.

The Duke d'Orleans is very active, but does not succeed. The discussion now is, whether the King is to be allowed a veto on every act that is passed; and parties differ on the subject.

The populace now call the poor Queen " Madame Veto," as they used to call her " Madame Deficit."

October 9th.

The Duke d'Orleans is becoming popular; they call him " Le pfere du peuple!"

The day before yesterday a troop of poissardes went about Paris, calling for bread! Hordes of brigands and women, with pikes and sabres, came on to Versailles. They say l'Abb"6 Gregoire[2] led them on. The Gardes du Corps, under the com-

1 The Dukes d'Aiguillon, Noailles, Montmorency, and others, abdicated their titles and privileges in the sitting of the National Assembly upon the 4th of August, But this act of concession, or patriotism, if it may be so called, did not save them from subsequent proscription.

2 Count Henry Gregoire, born somewhere near Lunéville. He entered holy orders at an early age, and was elected deputy to the States-General. He was one of the
